BRONSON SMART NAMED UTAH NRCS STATE ENGINEER

NRCS State Conservationist Sylvia Gillen announced that Bronson Smart has been named NRCS State Engineer, effective November 24. Gillen, shown congratulating Bronson in the accompanying photo, said he will provide outstanding leadership to the state engineering team as they continue to serve the engineering and technical service needs of the field offices and partners in Utah. Bronson began his NRCS service in Utah 10 years ago as an engineer. He earned a BS in Civil and Environmental Engineering and a Master of Engineering (Water Resources) from Utah State University. Bronson and his wife Stephanie have four children, Kayli 7, Mckenna 4, Isaac 2, and Ashlyn 2 months. They reside in Kamas where he continues to enjoy working on his farm with his family a time permits.
